

'HYGGE' POWERING PROJECT Refshaleoen - Copenhagen

DENMARK is one of the world's oldest monarchies with a history that stretches back to the Viking Age around the year 1000. Today, its capital, CO-PENHAGEN is known as one of the best place to live in. With a population of around 5.6 million inhabitants, the country has a UNIQUE CULTURE that has been translated as their LIFESTYLE.

Located in an advantageous area with a privilege climate plan, the Danish capital combines growth, development, and a higher quality of life with a reduction of Carbon emissions. Putting all its efforts with the contributions of its PEOPLE, the City of Copenhagen will become the first carbon neutral capital in 2025.

Hence, this Celebration of the carbon Neutrality will be reflected in this propose design project, where the people of Copenhagen will gather in one place to ILLUMINATE THE DANISH SOUL.

The design narrative yearns for the Danish word, 'Hygge', a coziness and warmth culture and lifestyle of the people to the site of Refshaleoen. For the Danes, the word 'Hygge' is essential when describing something uniquely Danish. It reflects the sense of community and sense of security which comes about when the Danes spend quality time with people they care about. By glimmering the site with thousands of propped out Hygge poles growing animatedly from four towers' skin and ground, unifying in a wavy language, an atmosphere of Hygge is brought to the people even upon arrival. However, Hygge is only truly reflected when people is engaged. The design seeks to convey an interactive effort of mapping individual contributions in possessing clean energy through the cycling culture. Hence, it is a mutual relationship between nature and people as nature induces energy to the people and the people will give back liveliness to the site.
